Text :

Mouloud Feraoun is an Algerian novelist and teacher whose works give vivid and warm portraits of Berber life and values.

Feraoun, the son of a peasant farmer, passed his youth in the Great Kabylie mountains. His early successes at school led to a teaching degree from Ecole Normal at Bouzareah. He supported the cause for Algerian independence.

His works all describe Kabyle peasant life. "Le Fils du Pauvre (1950; "The Poor Man's Son") is a semiautobiographical story of a Berber youth struggling against poverty and hardship to achieve an education and self-advancement. The portrayal of the simple life in the mountains is filled with nobility, human compassion, love of family and native soil. "La Terre et le Sang"(1933; "The Earth and Blood") deals with an émigré whose life in France is burdened by the sequestration of his proud countrymen and with the importance of honour, the basis of all traditional morality and the source of the sense of self-worth, dignity, pride and community. Les Chemins qui montent(1957; "The Upward Roads") carries forward in more bitter tones the themes of the resignation, resistance and the endurance of the fellah (peasant) faced with the realities of colonial society.

Feraoun's devotion to Kabyle culture is also evident in a collection of portraits and sketches, in a translation of 19th century Kabyle poetry, and in his journal.

Some of his books, written in French, have been translated into several languages including English and German.
